ADVERTISEMENT FOR BID

Sealed bids, subject to the conditions herein, will be received until 2:00 PM, Local Eastern Time on June 4th, 2024, by the Tri-Cities Airport Authority (Owner) at the Tri-Cities Airport, mezzanine level, Commission Room 302, and at that hour opened and publicly read, for furnishing all labor, materials, equipment, and performing all work connected with the Taxiway A Extension, Taxiway C Removal, and Runway 5 Safety Area Improvements. The proposed project consists of three elements. The first is the approximate 1,250' extension of Taxiway A. The proposed extension provides a direct taxi route for aircraft to the Runway 23 end which will improve safety by minimizing unnecessary taxiway diversions as well as providing additional parking/maneuvering area around the passenger concourse. The second element is the removal of the portion of Taxiway C between Taxiway A and Runway 5-23 due to the direct access and potential "hot spot" that this section of taxiway creates. Finally, the Project will improve the runway safety area grading at the Runway 5 end, near the Wheeler Cemetery, to bring safety area grades into compliance with FAA Advisory Circular recommendations. Copies of the Plans, Specifications, Proposals, etc., will be available via electronic download by contacting Kimley-Horn and Associates via email at ben.totty@kimley-horn.com. There is no charge for the project .pdf documents, but bidders are responsible for the printing of project documents. A non-mandatory, Pre-Bid Conference will be held at 3:00 PM, Local Eastern Time on May 21st, 2024, at the Tri-Cities Airport mezzanine level, Commission Room 302. Prospective bidders are strongly encouraged to attend. Each proposal must be accompanied by a bid bond from a Surety Company acceptable to the Owner or a cashier's check or certified check made payable to the Tri-Cities Airport Authority for not less than 5 percent of the total amount of the bid. A 100% contract bond will be required upon successful bid as part of the execution of the project contracts. Proposals/bids are required to remain open for acceptance or rejection for the duration outlined in General Contract Provisions 30-02, but the Owner may, in its sole discretion, release any Bid and return the Bid security prior to that date. The Owner reserves the right to reject any and/or all bids, to waive any informalities and technicalities in the bids received, to the extent permitted by applicable law, and to accept any bid which, in its sole discretion, is in the best interest of the Owner. All bidders are responsible for compliance with Federal and State requirements for preparation and submission of the proposal. The successful bidder shall be responsible for compliance with Federal and State Requirements in the Contract Agreement. Title 49 CFR Part 26, Participation by Disadvantaged Business Enterprises in Federal and/or State Department of Transportation programs, applies to this contract. The Owner has set a DBE participation goal of 5.3% of the dollar value of this contract. The Owner, in accordance with Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Non-discrimination in Federally Assisted Programs of the Department of Transportation, hereby notifies all bidders that it will affirmatively ensure the minority business enterprises are afforded full opportunity to submit bids in response to this invitation and will not be discriminated against on the grounds of race, color, sex or natural origin in consideration of award. Envelopes containing proposals must be sealed, addressed to the Tri-Cities Airport Authority, 2525 Highway 75, Suite 305, Blountville, TN 37617 and marked with the Contractor's name, Classification, Expiration date and the following project title: Taxiway A Extension, Taxiway C Removal, and Runway 5 Safety Area Improvements. Contractor will be required to have a valid Tennessee Contractor's License Number by project commencement date. COL-2000263

Brown v. Board: 70 years ago, school integration was a dream many believed could actually happen. It hasn't

In reality, school integration is all but gone, the victim of a gradual series of court cases that slowly eroded it, leaving little behind.

WASHINGTON — Seventy years ago this week, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled separating children in schools by race was unconstitutional. On paper, that decision — the fabled Brown v. Board of Education, taught in most every American classroom — still stands.

But for decades, American schools have been re-segregating. The country is more diverse than it ever has been, with students more exposed to classmates from different backgrounds. Still, around 4 out of 10 Black and Hispanic students attend schools where almost every one of their classmates is another student of color.

The intense segregation by race is linked to socio-economic conditions: Schools where students of color compose more than 90% of the student body are five times more likely to be located in low-income areas. That in turn has resounding academic consequences: Students who attend high-poverty schools, regardless of their family's finances, have worse educational outcomes.

Efforts to slow or reverse the increasing separation of American schools have stalled. Court cases slowly have chipped away at the dream outlined in the case of Brown v. Board, leaving fewer and fewer tools in the hands of districts to integrate schools by the early 2000s.

The arc of the moral universe, in this case, does not seem to be bending toward justice.

“School integration exists as little more than an idea in America right now, a little more than a memory,” said Derek Black, a law professor at the University of Southern California. “It’s actually an idea that a pretty good majority of Americans think is a good idea. But that’s all.”

MORE THAN JUST DIVERSE SCHOOLS

The dream of Brown was never as simple as diversity. It was about equality, and the opportunity that came with it.

From the beginning, funding and integration have been inseparable.

“Whiter schools and districts have more resources, and that is wrong,” said Ary Amerikaner, a former Obama administration official and the founder of Brown’s Promise. “But it is a reality. And that undermines opportunity for students of color, and it undermines our future democracy.”

We remember Brown v. Board as the end of segregated schools in the United States. But stating values does not, alone, change reality. Though the case was decided in 1954, it was followed by more than a decade of delay and avoidance before school districts began to meaningfully allow Black students to enter white schools.

It took further court rulings, monitoring and enforcement to bring a short-lived era of integration to hundreds of school districts. For the students who took part in those desegregation programs, their life trajectory changed — the more years spent in integrated schools, the better Black children fared on measures like educational attainment, graduation rates, health, and earning potential, with no adverse effects on white children.

For a brief period, it seemed the country recognized the deeper remedies required. “All things being equal, with no history of discrimination, it might well be desirable to assign pupils to schools nearest their homes,” Chief Justice Warren Burger wrote in Swann v. Mecklenburg, a 1971 decision that upheld the use of busing to integrate schools in North Carolina. “But all things are not equal in a system that has been deliberately constructed and maintained to enforce racial segregation.”

But not long after, another series of court decisions would unwind those outcomes. Fifty years ago, in Milliken v. Bradley, the court struck down a plan for integrating Detroit public schools across school district lines. The ruling undermined desegregation efforts in the north and Midwest, where small districts allowed white families to escape integration.

Other decisions followed. In Freeman v. Pitts, the court ruled resegregation from private choice and demographic shifts could not be monitored by the court. More than 200 districts were released from court-monitored desegregation plans. By 2007, when the court ruled in Parents Involved v. Seattle Public Schools, even voluntary integration plans could no longer consider assigning students on the basis of race.

“If you have the tools taken away from you ... by the Supreme Court, then you really don’t have a whole lot of tools,” said Stephan Blanford, a former Seattle Public Schools board member.

ONE DISTRICT AS A MICROCOSM

The arc of history is clear in the city where the landmark Swann busing case originated.

At its peak, Charlotte-Mecklenburg Schools was considered such a success at integrating classrooms and closing the gap between Black and white students that educators around the country came to tour the district. Today, more than 20 years after a court ruling overturned busing students on the basis of race, CMS is the most segregated district in North Carolina.

While there are no laws that keep kids siloed by race and income, in so many schools that is the reality.

Charlotte’s sprawling, complex busing plan brought Black and white students into the same schools — and by extension, made white children’s resources available to Black students for the first time. The district’s integration program ended when white families sued after their children did not get their top choice of school placement in a lottery that considered race.

Instead, the district created a school assignment process that said diversity “will be based on the family’s decisions.” It left the families of Mecklenburg County, some of whom have always had better choices than others, on their own. In the first year of the district’s choice program, Black families were more likely to try to use the choice plan to pick an alternative school. They were also more likely to get none of the magnet schools they wanted.

In the decades that followed, the district re-segregated. Years of busing had unwound the segregated makeup of the schools, but the underlying disparities and residential segregation had been left untouched.

Charlotte is a place where the divide between affluence and poverty, and the clear racial lines that mirror it, are so stark that people who live there refer to the city in two parts — the well-off “wedge” and the poorer “crescent.” How could anything other than an explicit consideration of those conditions ever hope to ameliorate them?

PETER BREGG/STAFF, ASSOCIATED PRESS
Children smile from window of a school bus in Springfield, Mass., as court-ordered busing brought Black children and white children together in elementary grades without incident, Sept. 16, 1974. Friday marks 70 years since the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that separating children in schools by race was unconstitutional. On paper, Brown v. Board of Education still stands. In reality, school integration is all but gone, the victim of a gradual series of court cases that slowly eroded it, leaving little behind.

Solutions to segregated schools exist in this context, often relying on individual families to make choices that are limited by their circumstances. Magnet schools and inter-district transfers — two common policies that may create great individual opportunities — are limited and will always leave some students behind.

Wherever you look, families are divided in how they view integration. For white and affluent families, it can exist as a noble idea, one filled with self-reflection.

But for families of color or poor families — those with less of a safety net — the point of integration often is to place their children somewhere better.

Efforts to integrate schools can take two paths, Stefan Lallinger, executive director of Next100, a public policy think tank, says. They either fight around the margins, creating slightly less segregated spaces, or they address the problem head on, which in many parts of the country would mean tackling boundaries deliberately drawn to separate rich from poor.

Senators urge $32B in emergency spending on AI after finishing yearlong review

By MARY CLARE JALONICK and MATT O'BRIEN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A bipartisan group of four senators led by Majority Leader Chuck Schumer is recommending that Congress spend at least $32 billion over the next three years to develop artificial intelligence and place safeguards around it, writing in a report released Wednesday that the U.S. needs to “harness the opportunities and address the risks” of the quickly developing technology.

The group of two Democrats and two Republicans said in an interview Tuesday that while they sometimes disagreed on the best paths forward, they felt it was imperative to find consensus with the technology taking off and other countries like China investing heavily in its development. They settled on a raft of broad policy recommendations that were included in their 33-page report.

While any legislation related to AI will be difficult to pass, especially in an election year and in a divided Congress, the senators said that regulation and incentives for innovation are urgently needed.

“It’s complicated, it’s difficult, but we can’t afford to put our head in the sand,” said Schumer, D-N.Y., who convened the group last year after AI chatbot ChatGPT entered the marketplace and showed that it could in many ways mimic human behavior.

The group recommends in the report that Congress draft emergency spending legislation to boost U.S. investments in artificial intelligence, including new research and development and new testing standards to try to understand the potential harms of the technology. The group also recommended new requirements for transparency as artificial intelligence products are rolled out and that studies be conducted into the potential impact of AI on jobs and the U.S. workforce.

Republican Sen. Mike Rounds, a member of the group, said the money would be well spent not only to compete with other countries who are racing into the AI space but also to improve Americans’ quality of life — supporting technology that could help cure some cancers or chronic illnesses, he said, or improvements in weapons systems could help the country avoid a war.

“This is a time in which the dollars we put into this particular investment will pay dividends for the taxpayers of this country long term,” he said.

The group came together a year ago after Schumer made the issue a priority — an unusual posture for a majority leader — and brought in Democratic Sen. Martin Heinrich of New Mexico, Republican Sen. Todd Young of Indiana and

As the four senators began meeting with tech executives and experts, Schumer said in a speech over the summer that the rapid growth of artificial intelligence tools was a “moment of revolution” and that the government must act quickly to regulate companies that are developing it.

Playing in the PGA Championship at 61, golf teacher’s biggest lesson is the power of perseverance

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — At first glance, it’s easy to pick out the most unlikely entrant in golf’s second major of the year. He’s a 61-year-old club pro out of Oklahoma named Tracy Phillips.

A deeper look at Phillips’ pedigree suggests the only fluke about the 5-foot-4 golf instructor teeing it up at the PGA Championship this week is that it took him 40 years longer to get here than anyone expected.

“It got to the point where I just didn’t like the game at all,” Phillips said in explaining his long, winding road to a Thursday tee time at Valhalla, which included a 20-year break from competitive golf during what would have been his prime.

More than four decades after he was ranked as the best junior golfer in America, Phillips is one of the 20 club pros who qualified to play in this year’s PGA.

Back in 1980, his top ranking was bolstered by a win at the PGA Junior Championship. Phillips was headed for a full ride at Oklahoma State and was fully expecting to play on the PGA Tour once he was done with college.

He had a short game that made everyone stop and look.

“The next person I played with who was doing the same kind of stuff with a wedge in their hand was Seve” Ballesteros, said longtime PGA Tour veteran Scott Verplank, an OSU teammate of Phillips.

Ballesteros went on to win two Masters and three British Opens with a short game viewed by many as the best ever. Phillips ended up with a herniated disk that led to the loss of his swing. Years of searching — both in his soul, and for his golf game — ensued.

“I struggled being able to find a golf course off the tee box,” he said.

Eventually, he gave up on becoming a touring pro.

“It was going from the highest of highs to the lowest of lows, basically,” Phillips said. “And completely falling out of love with the game.”

The reason he kept the clubs nearby was because his dad, Buddy, was the long-serving, magnetic head pro at Cedar Ridge Country Club in Tulsa. As a kid, Tracy would go with his dad in the mornings to open the shop, then spend the day putting and chipping and playing.

Lessons learned from his dad — from the hard work in the shop, and also on the range — kept Tracy very much tied into golf. He caddied for Kelli Kuehne on the LPGA Tour. He got into the teaching biz himself, which is how he makes a living to this day. Last week, Phillips had lessons on the calendar, never mind that he was trying to get ready for Valhalla — a monster of a course he had not stepped foot on until this week.

As much as the course is set up for the Scottie Schefflers, Jon Rahms and Rory McIlroys of the world, the tournament itself is a tip of the cap to guys like Michael Block — the club pro who is back after finishing 15th last year — along with Phillips and the rest of the club pros who keep this sport running at the grassroots on a day-to-day basis.

Not to be confused with the PGA Tour, the PGA of America, which runs this tournament, is the organization that supports the men and women who work behind the counters at munis and country clubs selling shirts, tracking inventory and giving lessons.

Pros like Phillips, in turn, are there for club players and weekend hackers, so many of whom have, at some point, come to a teacher like him in search of a tip, a thought, an answer — anything to help them save a stroke or conquer their struggles.

“I’ve had a lot of help myself,” Phillips said.

Among those he credits are a friend named Billy Ray Young who “didn’t call himself a sports psychologist but really is,” and another Tulsa-area club pro, Vince Bizik, who got him involved in some friendly, high-level Monday games that helped Phillips rediscover the kind of player he could really be after some two decades in the wilderness.

Also, a golf video. In a turn of events that will leave most golfers nodding in appreciation, Phillips said something clicked while he was watching an instructional video by George Gankas, an online teacher who generated buzz when one of his students, Matthew Wolff, was peaking in 2020.

“As a teacher, I’m leery of saying, ‘This guy read this magazine article or this guy watches these videos and it helped him a lot,’” Phillips said. “That can do some damage if it’s not the right match for what a person needs. But for me, it was really good because it worked out for what I needed in my golf swing.”

Since picking up the clubs again, Phillips has been in four Senior PGAs, with a fifth scheduled for later this month.

This week, however, is his first major with the players from the regular tour — a well-used mulligan in a game that is stingy about second chances.

“At 61, he’s getting the last laugh,” Verplank said. “I’m sure he’ll have a smile on his face the whole time he’s there and he should enjoy every minute. And maybe he’ll play good.”

Rory McIlroy files for divorce from his wife of 7 years ahead of the PGA Championship

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Rory McIlroy has filed for divorce after seven years of marriage, according to court records in Palm Beach County, Florida, a stunning development going into the PGA Championship.

McIlroy and his wife, Erica

Stoll, had a storybook meeting during the Ryder Cup in 2012, began dating two years later and were married in 2017. They have one daughter, Poppy, born in September 2020.

TMZ first reported on the filing, which was made Monday.

The petition for divorce described the marriage as irretrievably broken and asked that a prenuptial agreement signed about a month before their April 21, 2017, wedding be validated and enforced. The prenuptial agreement was sealed.

McIlroy’s attorney was listed as Thomas Sasser, the same attorney who represented Tiger Woods when his wife divorced him in 2010.

“Rory McIlroy’s communications team confirmed today that a divorce has been filed. They stressed Rory’s desire to ensure this difficult time is as respectful and amicable as possible,” said a statement from his manager, Sean O’Flaherty.

He said there would be no further comment.

McIlroy arrived at Valhalla on Tuesday. He has gone 10 years since winning a major, the last one at Valhalla in 2014 for the PGA Championship. His pre-tournament news conference was scheduled for Wednesday.

McIlroy and Stoll met under unusual circumstances. She worked for the PGA of America in 2012 during the Ryder Cup at Medinah in the Chicago suburbs, where McIlroy nearly missed his Sunday singles match because he said he forgot he was in the Central time zone.
